Course description

This course examines the question of global development. The key questions may be summarized as follows:

- What is global development? How should it be defined and measured?
- What patterns of development can be discerned across countries, within countries, and through time?
- What are the potential causes?
- What is our responsibility vis-à-vis those who are less privileged?

These are not easy questions and they do not suggest quick answers. One could easily spend a lifetime exploring a single facet of a single question. Through readings, lecture, and discussion we shall try to summarize the current state of research. But the purpose of this course is not to arrive at authoritative conclusions. It is, rather, to introduce students to these important topics and to underline their inter-relationships. Arguably, it is difficult to answer any single question without having a sense of how it relates to other questions. It is hard, for instance, to understand the role of education in structuring the achievement of individuals and societies without grappling with problems of health and infrastructure. It is hard, similarly, to understand the role of nation-states without also grappling with the international system within which states are situated. It is hard, finally, to understand present-day problems without understanding their history. In development, everything is connected to everything else.

It follows that in understanding the topic of global development one must incorporate the work of many disciplines. This includes philosophy, economics, sociology, psychology, history, anthropology, archeology, and political science – all of which are represented on this syllabus (to varying degrees). Accordingly, this course may be regarded as a point of entrée into a variety of disciplines stretching across the social sciences and (to a lesser degree) the humanities.

Core skills

The course has a substantive goal (described above) and a methodological goal. The latter concerns the development of core skills – reading, writing, research, and analysis. These skills will stand you in good stead in your college career and your post-college career. They are the main “take-home” of a college education. Facts about the world are much less important than the ability to understand the world, and for the latter you need to develop core skills. We shall therefore look at substantive topics with methodological lenses. What is X saying and how convincing is it? What’s the nature of the evidence?

Grades

Grades will be based on the following components: (a) class attendance, participation, oral presentations, thesis statement (20%); (b) midterm (20%), (c) final exam (20%), (d) first draft of research paper (10%), and (e) final draft of research paper (30%).

You should be aware that this class will require a good deal of time and effort on your part. If you are unable to make this time-commitment you may be happier in a different course.

Protocol

Attendance will factor into your grade (see above). Please arrive on time. Put your cell phone away. Do not surf the web or use email. Be respectful of others in your comments. Do not leave until class is dismissed.

Sharing of Course Materials is Prohibited

No materials used in this class, including, but not limited to, lecture hand-outs, videos, assessments (quizzes, exams, papers, projects, homework assignments), in-class materials, review sheets, and additional problem sets, may be shared online or with anyone outside of the class unless you have my explicit, written permission. Unauthorized sharing of materials promotes cheating. It is a violation of the University’s Student Honor Code and an act of academic dishonesty. We are well aware of the sites used for sharing materials, and any materials found online that are associated with you, or any suspected unauthorized sharing of materials, will be reported to Student Conduct and Academic Integrity in the Office of the Dean of Students. These reports can result in sanctions, including failure in the course.

Academic conduct

Each student in the course is expected to abide by the University of Texas Honor Code:

“As a student of The University of Texas at Austin, I shall abide by the core values of the University and uphold academic integrity.”

This means that work you produce on assignments, tests and exams is all your own work, unless it is assigned as group work. The instructor will make it clear for each test, exam or assignment whether collaboration is encouraged or not. Always cite your sources. If you use words or ideas that are not your own (or that you have used in previous class), you must make that clear otherwise you will be guilty of plagiarism and subject to academic disciplinary action, including failure of the course. You are responsible for understanding UT’s Academic Honesty Policy:

http://deanofstudents.utexas.edu/sjs/acint_student.php

Absences, extensions

Students are expected to take exams and complete written work at their scheduled times. By UT Austin policy, you must notify me of your pending absence at least fourteen days prior to the date of observance of a religious holy day. If you must miss a class, an examination, a work assignment, or a project in order to observe a religious holy day, you will be given an opportunity to complete the missed work within a reasonable time after the absence.

Participation

I expect active participation from students. Do not think of participation simply as a matter of “saying something.” What you say must be pertinent to the question at hand. Be especially judicious in the use of anecdotes drawn from your personal life. Sometimes, they are relevant to the subject matter; sometimes, not.

Let me say a word about my responses to your comments. You should realize that any instructor who incorporates discussion into classroom activity is in a somewhat awkward position. I want to encourage open and frank discussion but I must also be sure to correct any misperceptions that arise from such discussion. If a comment is factually or logically wrong I will call attention to it. The purpose is not to embarrass the speaker but simply to clarify the point – for that person and for everyone else, many of whom may share the confusion.

In any case, making mistakes is part of the learning experience. If you do not allow yourself to make mistakes you are preventing yourself from learning. I make mistakes all the time. There is nothing wrong with a wrong answer. Oftentimes, the most productive sort of answer or question is one that reveals what is not clear in people’s minds.

Please be attentive to standard rules of decorum: avoid dogmatism, respect others’ views, and try to move class discussion forward (pay attention to what others say and respond to the previous point). Use the locution “like” only when comparing things – not, like, when pausing in the middle of a sentence.

Research Paper

The topic of the paper is up to you. The only restriction is that it must relate to some aspect of this course.

I advise you to pick a subject area that you are interested in or have some connection to. Perhaps you have already learned something about it from another course or from your life experience outside the university. (Make sure you are not recycling material from a paper you have written, or are writing, for a different course. If you are unsure about the problem of duplication check with me.)

Once you have a general topic (e.g., urban “slum” poverty or “globalization”) you will need to narrow it down. The most common problem with papers of this sort is that students try to do too much. They try to cover all aspects of a topic in a cursory fashion. That’s fine for some purposes but it is unlikely to be very original; it is simply a summary of what is known. I want you to make an original contribution. That requires focus. Of course, “focus” is a matter of degrees and much depends upon the topic you are working on. Check in with me to get feedback on your topic before you get too far into it. To facilitate this, there is an early due date for handing in your thesis statement (see syllabus).

In brainstorming for a topic you might start with a general theme, e.g., “globalization” or “agriculture.” Take a look at the syllabus for ideas. Then do some background reading on that theme, perhaps including sources listed on the syllabus. Find some question that you are curious about, or about which there is dispute, e.g., Does globalization contribute to income inequality? Then see what has been written about this question and what you might add to the discussion.

You might, for instance, try to understand why scholars disagree on this question. If you can offer some insight into this, that would be an original contribution (provided it is your synthesis, not someone else’s). You might try to categorize the different approaches in some fashion (e.g., by region or country, by historical era, by discipline, by methodology). Find some way to analyze the literature, to make sense of it.

You might also examine a particular case, e.g., a country or a sector, to see how it has been affected by exposure to foreign trade. For some countries, trade openness occurs at a particular point in time, making it possible to explore changes before and after. For some sectors, similarly, openness occurs at a specific point in time (when trade restrictions are relaxed), making it possible to explore changes before and after.

Another approach to finding a topic begins with an interest in a country or a region. Do some reading about that area with an eye to its development. What role did globalization (or any of the subjects on this syllabus) play? Why is the country or region rich or poor today? What accounts for its development (or lack thereof)?

Bear in mind that I am not concerned with what you argue. My concern, rather, is with how well it is argued. So, do not try to guess what my view of the subject might be. It is not like an exam where the instructor is looking for a regurgitation of assigned materials.

With respect to sources, much depends on your subject. I urge you to integrate not just popular sources (books written for a general audience, newspaper articles, blog posts, and the like) but also academic sources. At least half of your sources should be published in an academic press or peer review journal. If you have the inclination and skills to do some data analysis that can also be useful (again, depending on the subject), and I am happy to lend a hand.

The target length is 10-12 pp, double-space, 1-inch margins all around, 12-point font. However, don't be too concerned with the length of the paper as this is the least important aspect of the assignment. The important rubrics are the following:

- Is there a thesis and is it clearly stated?
- Is the thesis significant, in some way? Does it matter?
- Is the thesis adequately argued or proven (within the constraints imposed by time, resources, and available sources)?
- Is the study innovative with respect to theory, method, or findings? Does it expand our knowledge of the chosen subject?
- Is the essay well-written, i.e., cogently organized, grammatically correct, stylistically elegant, and citing all appropriate sources (avoiding any suggestion of plagiarism)?

Bear in mind that writing is a long, arduous process. When I write, I am continually revising. (Some paragraphs will be re-written dozens of times prior to the final draft.) To improve your writing, you need to practice. To encourage this, the assignment is divided into one oral presentation (with slides, which is a form of writing) and two drafts. A preliminary draft must be turned in by the assigned date (see below). I will provide feedback on this draft and assign a grade. You may also read, and provide comments, on each other's drafts. (Indeed, I encourage you to do so.) The final draft will be due at the end of the semester (see below).

Advice on writing is offered in Chapter 14 of Gerring & Christenson, An Applied Guide to Social Science Methodology, and is also the subject of a lecture.

The UT writing center is a fantastic resource. They can help you with the stylistic elements of writing that are time-consuming, partly because English is such an idiosyncratic language. To find out more, and schedule a session, go to their web site (<http://uwc.utexas.edu/>).

For further advice, check with me. If you are presenting early in the semester you will get my feedback at this stage. If you are presenting later you should arrange a time to speak with me (or show up at office hours) early in the semester so you get on the right track.

Presentations

Students are required to do an oral presentation of their project. You will sign up for a slot at the beginning of the semester. These presentations will occur at the end of each class.

The exercise will be graded in an informal fashion. I am expecting a ten-minute presentation with PPT. Slides should summarize the argument of your research paper, like an outline of the paper you will write or (if you present toward the end of the semester) have already written. Make sure you have a research question, a thesis statement, a (brief) summary of the literature on the topic (showing how your work contributes to that literature), and what your evidence consists of, or will consist of.

Pay attention to Powerpoint etiquette and presentational etiquette, as explained in the textbook. For example, minimize the number of words on each slide. Spend most of your time looking at the audience, and only occasionally glance at your slides. Feel free to use notes but do not read a prepared text. And so forth.

For further tips, see Gerring and Christenson, An Applied Guide to Social Science Methodology, ch 15. You may also wish to take a look at TedTalks and other lectures on Youtube, listed below (“Additional resources”).

The presentation offers an opportunity to test out ideas for your project and receive feedback from your fellow students. Those who present early in the semester are expected to be at an earlier stage than those who present later. The benefits of presenting earlier are that you are forced to get started – and, if you need to change course, you have plenty of time to do so.

Reading

Assigned readings consist of material posted on Canvas or available on the web (you may need to access journals through the library system).

Readings, web sites, and films listed as Background are optional. (You do not have to read it and will not be tested on it.)

As you read, think about the material. What is the author’s main argument(s)? How strong is the evidence? Good reading is not just a matter of memorizing arguments but also a matter of analysis. I want you to read critically, to be active consumers of social science. How convinced are you of the argument(s)? Have the counter-arguments been adequately addressed? How else might one approach this subject matter? It is more important to have thought about the material than to have read every sentence in an assignment.

Additional Resources (Optional)

News

Try the international editions of the New York Times, the BBC World News (un-gated), The Guardian (un-gated), Foreign Affairs (available through UT), or The Economist (available through UT) – all available on-line. You should also consult regional sources specific to the part of the world you are focusing on in your research paper. Although some of these sources will be gated they may have student discounts and older issues will be available through UT. When navigating global sites click through to some particular region of the world to get stories on that region.

Journals

Important academic journals focused on international development (most of which can be accessed electronically through the library system) include: Journal of Development Economics, Journal of Development Studies, Journal of International Development, Population and Development Review, Studies in Comparative International Development, World Bank Economic Review, World Bank Research Observer, World Development.

General-purpose journals in economics, political science, and sociology also feature work pertaining to the themes of this course.

University Resources

Sanger Learning Center

More than one-third of UT undergraduate students use the Sanger Learning Center each year to improve their academic performance. All students are welcome to take advantage of Sanger Center's classes and workshops, private learning specialist appointments, peer academic coaching, and tutoring for more than 70 courses in 15 different subject areas. For more information, visit <http://www.utexas.edu/ugs/slcc> or call 512-471-3614 (JES A332).

University Writing Center

The University Writing Center offers free, individualized, expert help with writing for any UT student, by appointment or on a drop-in basis. Consultants help students develop strategies to improve their writing. The assistance we provide is intended to foster students' resourcefulness and self-reliance. <http://uwc.utexas.edu/>

Public Speaking Center

Schedule a one-hour Zoom consultation, individually or as a team, with a trained peer speech consultant to prepare or rehearse for any public speaking event or assignment.

Schedule

Introduction and Overview (23 August)

I. Core Skills

Causality (25 August)

Questions:

- What is a causal argument? What is a causal analysis? Subtext: Why are questions about global development so intractable? How do we know what we know, and why don't we know the things we want to know?

Assigned:

- Gerring, John, Dino Christenson. 2017. An Applied Guide to Social Science Methodology. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, chs 6-7.
- Jern, Alan. 2020. "Covid-19 death skepticism, explained by a cognitive scientist." VOX (Sep 1): www.vox.com/2020/9/1/21410352/cdc-6-percent-covid-19-deaths-comorbidities

- An example: <http://cew.georgetown.edu/wp-content/uploads/CEW-Buyer-Beware.pdf>

Finding sources, reading, reviewing, brainstorming, writing (30 August)

Questions:

- How to find what you are looking for. How to summarize the literature on a subject. How to identify a topic. How to communicate with the written word.

Assigned:

- Gerring, John, Dino Christenson. 2017. An Applied Guide to Social Science Methodology. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, chs 11-14.

II. A Survey of Global Welfare

Global Welfare (1 September)

Presentation:

Questions:

- How unequal is the world distribution of material things (e.g., income, health, education)? How have these patterns changed over time?

Assigned:

- Gapminder. www.gapminder.org/
- If it were my home: www.ifitweremyhome.com/
- Milanovic, Branko. 2013. "Global income inequality in numbers: in history and now", Global Policy (May), 198-208. www.gc.cuny.edu/CUNY_GC/media/CUNY-Graduate-Center/PDF/Centers/LIS/Milanovic/papers/2013/gpol12032.pdf

III. Explanations

Geography (6 September)

Presentation:

Questions:

- To what extent do geographic factors (climate, soil, access to rivers and seas, land mass configurations, natural flora and fauna) affect long-term development? Why did Asia advance first? Why did the industrial revolution occur in Europe rather than East Asia? What immediate and ongoing impact might geography have on development?

Assigned:

- Diamond, Jared. 1998. “The Evolution of Guns and Germs.” In Evolution: Society, Science, and the Universe, edited by A. C. Fabian, Cambridge University Press.

VII. Broader Questions

Happiness (10 November)

Presentation:

Questions:

- Arguably, the non-material aspects of human welfare (e.g., happiness, fulfillment) are much more important than the material aspects of human welfare (e.g., income, health, education). Are people getting happier? What causes happiness? How does economic development affect happiness?

Assigned:

Global Development as an Analytic Problem (29 November)

Presentation:

Questions:

- Why are questions about international development recalcitrant? Why is progress in the social sciences so much slower, and less cumulative, than progress in the natural sciences? Why is methodology essential for development?
