Course Description

This course examines the principles, aspirations, virtues, and limitations of the American regime, as seen through the lens of its most profound advocates and its most profound critics. The word “regime” is here understood not only as a system of government, but also in the broad Aristotelian sense of the word: What way of life does a particular polity encourage? Who is admired? Who is scorned? Who rules? Who cannot? What habits, pursuits, and qualities of character are encouraged or discouraged by the various moral, institutional, religious, familial, and economic presuppositions that a community and its citizens more or less implicitly adopt? Those presuppositions preserve and even constitute, in large part, our regime.

And thus we are confronted with a danger. Perhaps we ourselves, immersed in the American regime as it currently stands, have adopted blindly certain false presuppositions, or have veered away from (or misunderstood) certain true presuppositions that need to be recovered. That is a danger, or a pair of dangers, that every thoughtful citizen must confront. This course attempts to offer students a path toward such a confrontation.

This course fulfills the second half of the legislative requirement for Government.

Requirements

Careful reading is the most important requirement. The reading assignments in this course are not long, but they are quite difficult. Be sure to read them slowly and to take notes, in the margins or in a separate notebook, while you read. You should try to come to every class with questions, comments, and interpretations. To motivate close reading, I will give unannounced free-writing assignments.

There will be two short papers (1500 words), one in the middle of the term (on liberalism and the Founding) and the other at the end of the term (on Tocqueville, race, Marx, and Nietzsche). There will also be a final exam (on all of the authors, but with slightly greater weight given to the second half of the course). The exam will be an essay exam.

Electronics Policy

- No computers are allowed in class, unless you have a special need for one (in which case you should explain that need to me, during my office hours).
- Please turn your cell phones off, and do not take them out at any time in the classroom.

Grades

Your grade will be calculated by the following method. Plus/minus grades will be used in the final grades.

Attendance and Participation: 15%

First Paper (due Oct. 19th): 20%

Second Paper (due Nov. 23rd): 20%

Free-writing Exercises: 15%

Final exam: 30%

Cultural Diversity in the United States

This course carries the flag for Cultural Diversity in the United States. The purpose of the Cultural Diversity in the United States Flag is for students to explore in depth the shared practices and beliefs of one or more underrepresented cultural groups subject to persistent marginalization. In addition to learning about these diverse groups in relation to their specific contexts, students should engage in an active process of critical reflection. You should therefore expect a substantial portion of your grade to come from assignments covering the practices, beliefs, and histories of at least one underrepresented cultural group in the U.S.

Ethics

This course carries the Ethics flag. Ethics courses are designed to equip you with skills that are necessary for making ethical decisions in your adult and professional life. You should therefore expect a substantial portion of your grade to come from assignments involving ethical issues and the process of applying ethical reasoning to real-life situations.
